www.tuev-sued.de/netinform Climate and Energy Module

Climate change is undoubtedly a global subject that is increasingly affecting all areas of life and business. Determination of the Kyoto Treaty in 1997 – and, above all, coming into force of the EU Directive on Emissions Trading on January 1st, 2005 – have made climate change truly relevant for the European industry and energy sector. The ways in which energy is generated, distributed, stored and used are closely connected with climate change. Although organizations can choose from a large number of approaches to satisfying the new framework conditions, they must also take complex interactions and varied requirements into account. This means that they must address this subject, while utilizing time and resources as efficiently as possible for their own benefit at the same time.

netinform offers active support in all questions concerning climate change, emissions trading and energy netinform not only provides information about international agreements, legal regulations and important directives but also tools for cost-effective implementation. The module addresses all important target groups, viz. operators of production and energy plants and energy managers.

The Sample Projects category presents case studies in the fields of climate change and energy efficiency. It provides information about technical realization, formal requirements and details regarding emissions reductions achieved.

Under Research you will find concise descriptions of complex issues in the fields of emissions trading and power from renewable energy sources, a collection of relevant directives, aids and tools, and information about the funding of projects resulting in a reduction of greenhouse-gas emissions.

The Virtual Exhibition offers suitable partners for consultancy, planning and realization of envisaged measures.
